

TV hosts’ fight goes viral on Chinese social media

|                          |   |
|--------------------------|---|
| Notes &amp; Cues: | Article: An online fight between a Fox Business Network host and a broadcaster for Chinese state television has garnered over 20 million views on China’s popular Sina Weibo micro-blogging site and generated thousands of comments. Fox’s Trish Regan this week said on her show that the U.S. has no choice but to wage a war against China. Liu Xin, a host for state-run channel China Global Television Network, responded on her own prime time opinion program by saying Regan was acting like a spokesperson for President Donald Trump. Trump blacklisted Huawei Technologies Co. and scores of its affiliates earlier this month in a bid to stymie its access to the U.S. market. Regan then defended herself in an 11-minute clip and tweeted an invitation for a debate to Chinese state television. “You accuse me of being ‘emotional’ and not knowing my facts — wrong! You name the time and place, and I’ll be there!” she wrote. Liu responded saying she would get back to her “very soon.” |
| Summary:          |   |