

Oscar predictions 2018

Notes & Cues:	Article: Choosing the winner for this year's Oscar best-picture award essentially comes down to an optimist vs. pessimist mentality – in other words, do you see an abundance of good movies during this awards season, or do you see the absence of a truly great one? Historically, by this stage in the so-called awards season, support has appeared to coalesce around a couple of films. And "Three Billboards," which also won the Golden Globe for best drama, would appear to have seized the pole position. Several other movies likely to receive an Oscar award when they're unveiled come with their own handicaps. "Get Out" and "The Shape of Water," for example, both have a foot in the horror genre, which is not historically one that academy voters have favored. The Oscar nominations will only settle the guessing games about who is likely to win on March 4, and as the Hollywood Reporter noted, "there's still a lot of time for the winds to change."
